Reduce Capacity for Flights to New York

Finland's national flag carrier Finnair announced its new winter schedule for this season with a decrease in the number of flights to New York from Helsinki.

The new schedule takes affect from 8 December 2009, where the number of flights will drop down to five or six a week, depending on the exact travel dates. Up until 7 December, the airline will continue its daily service between Finland and America taking passengers on their USA holidays.

The airline asked passengers to check carefully with their travel schedule to ensure their proposed travel dates over the winter will be accommodated by the new schedule.

For North America Michael Maass urged customers not to book with Finnair despite the reduction in capacity: "But do consider Finnair when you next trip, because sometimes flying via Helsinki to one of our European destinations makes more sense, financially and from an environmental perspective."

Whilst Finnair reduced its capacity this month, Iceland Express offered flights to New York as the company expanded its network connections to 25 destinations.

Iceland Express told TravelMole.com: "We are especially delighted to be able to offer direct flights to New York and hope our new service will entice more consumers to fly with us as they want to discover the glacial beauty and vibrant culture of Iceland on a low-cost trip to New York."
