Taste of Buckhead Recap, Grand Hyatt, Buckhead, Atlanta, GA

Maybe I missed it, but the Taste of Buckhead, put on by the Buckhead Business Association didn't seem to get much love in the foodie world. Taste of Buckhead was at the Grand Hyatt in Buckhead on May 22nd. To me, it seemed like a good deal - 10 bucks to sample some of Buckhead's restaurants. Count me in. Attendance at the Taste of Buckhead seemed pretty good. I was there at 6 when they opened the doors, and it just got more and more crowded in the smallish room.

The idea is to get a mix of Buckhead businesses and restaurants as exhibitors. The setup is good if you are there to eat, but bad if you are there representing business. The restaurants are lined up along the walls of the rectangular room, while the businesses are in the center. So, if you'd like to avoid the businesses, all you have to do is walk around the perimeter of the room.

Participating restaurants included: Aja, Brio, Johnny Rockets, Joel Brasserie, Season's 52, Saskatoon, Shula's 347, Capital Grille, Eclipse di Luna, and newcomer Coast Seafood. I tried something from all of these guys with the exception of Johnny Rockets (they had milkshakes). Nothing personal, but I draw the line at 3 desserts.
